Photo by Nicole Sohl. Have you ever wondered what Instagram, the social app for photo sharing, is doing with all those engineers? Or how it decides to build features like "Insta-grams," which comes up in the app's main menu screen, with every new account sign-up? Or what kind of products the company has been working on? You might have some questions, but you know that it'd be much more informative to talk to the people building the product. And that's what Instagram did today. The company's four-year-old product team is expanding to add a chief product officer, a chief marketing officer and two more product management roles. They'll be joining Instagram co-founders and CTO Adam Mosseri and product manager Jonathan Gheller who are also newly promoted to that role. "We always knew our product team was going to grow," Mosseri said in a chat with Mashable. "We thought it was going to happen over time, but we wanted to make the move official now. "We've always treated the product team as an important piece of the team.... We want people to feel included and welcome in that sense, and now that this is official, you can expect us to work on product a lot more often." Here are the five roles the new Product and Marketing team will focus on: Chief Product Officer: "This role covers product strategy and the product itself, our user experience and the customer service we provide," said Mosseri. "We've always been very open and willing to talk with people that have ideas for how to improve Instagram. We feel like this will continue, and it'll be a part of what 09e8f5149f

Whether it is a small business or a hobby, organizing and making sure that your inventory is properly accounted for in a timely fashion can become a major burden on your shoulders. Besides the effort and time required to keep track of everything and to maintain the products, you have to order new stocks and packages based on what you already have and you need to pay for all of that. Taking all this into account, you have to admit that tracking your inventory manually is not a pleasant task. It is challenging, extremely tiresome and there are chances that you may lose track of things. Things are not that bad. You can turn to software that will help you to automate this daunting and stress-filled task. So, are you searching for a reliable and versatile software that will make your life a lot easier? If this is the case, then you came to the right place. Packing products into boxes, and then into warehouses, before ultimately moving them to another store in the city or a neighboring one is a very tedious task that involves many aspects, such as stock-taking, finding your items in the archives and tracking them down. When this can be done manually, it takes hours, whereas an automated system can do this in an instant. This is why barcode technology has become so popular nowadays. Thus, you need a software solution that will turn this tedious process into a straightforward one that will save you time and efforts. If you run a small business, chances are that you already know this software is available in the form of a very useful and handy application that is able to generate barcodes, decode them and put them into an inventory tracking system. You might be intrigued to find out more about this program and what makes it so special. Luckily, you can take a look at its features on a deep level and learn more. Features: This is one of the most versatile barcode generating applications. It comes equipped with two modules: an ISO-2 code generator and an extended EAN-13 code generator. The latter allows you to produce a variety of standardized barcode formats that are compatible with the most popular formats in the world: UPC-A, EAN-13, Code 39, Code 128, Codabar, RSS-14 (all variants), QR Code, Data Matrix and PDF-417. Additionally, it is possible to save your codes to a.barcode file. This file can be used later to create an invoice or to update your inventory.
