Aircraft typically include a door assembly or section on an opening of the fuselage to allow ingress and egress of a passenger or other personnel. The door assembly includes a door and frame structure that is typically affixed to the fuselage opening and is pivotally disposed to allow the door to swing open to provide a passenger ingress or egress through the door. The door includes a door panel and frame assembly, a hinged door pivotally attached to a door frame. The door panel and frame assembly is interconnected to the hinged door via structural elements, such as a handle assembly, door latch and striker, which are assembled to the door frame. The door panel and frame assembly may be pivoted to allow the door panel to swing open, allowing ingress or egress of a passenger or other personnel, such as a medical technician or patient. During movement of the door from a closed position to an open position, the door may be subjected to a lateral force, such as a wind gust, which can undesirably cause the door to bounce or oscillate, or undesirably transmit vibration to the fuselage. Therefore, it would be beneficial to ensure a smooth movement of the door through a minimal amount of vibration. It would also be beneficial to dampen any such movement that may be present.1.
