Patient preference for treatment type in three-level image guided radiation treatment of prostate cancer. To evaluate patient preferences for treatment type, when patients' treatment preferences were matched to their actual treatment modalities. The study included 72 patients with prostate cancer. Patients self-reported their treatment preferences in a survey and were then randomly assigned to one of four treatment modalities: watchful waiting, active surveillance, external beam radiotherapy, or brachytherapy. We analyzed patients' degree of correspondence between their preferences and their actual treatments using a multinomial logistic regression. Potential variables of age, education, race, type of prostate cancer, and treatments were included in the model. The mean age of the patients was 67 years, 44% were educationally at the high school level, 34% at the college level, and 21% at the post-college level. 29% had stage A prostate cancer, 43% stage B, and 28% stage C. When the treatment preference did not match the treatment they received, they preferred conventional radiation over brachytherapy (p = 0.003) and brachytherapy over external beam radiation (p = 0.001). The patients who were most satisfied with their treatment had an overall preference for conventional radiation (p = 0.005). When patients' treatment preferences matched their treatment modalities, they were most satisfied with conventional radiation. Patients with a preference for external beam radiation were most satisfied with their actual modality of treatment. More research is needed to identify the factors that affect patient decision making for treatment type. Company and independent directors are in the final stages of agreement about how to divvy up responsibility for the inquiry. A draft of the report by the five-person panel is likely to be released in a few weeks. But already there are signs that the final report will be a short one. The draft was forwarded to the Parliamentary Joint Committee on Corporations and Financial Markets, which is now examining aspects of Mr Packer's conduct. At the same time, the committee is considering whether to recommend a criminal investigation into Mr Packer's conduct. There are also questions about who will foot the $ d0c515b9f4

Dihydropyridine-sensitive calcium stores of mouse parotid acinar cells and of isolated microsomal vesicles were identified as ryanodine-sensitive stores, released Ca2+ upon emptying of K+-induced stores with an average content of 30 to 60 μmol/mg of protein, measured by atomic absorption spectrometry. The effects of various drugs on Ca2+ store release were studied in intact cells and in subcellular fragments in order to identify the receptors involved in this process. As observed in intact cells, the divalent cations Mn2+, Ba2+, Sr2+, or Ca2+ induce a biphasic release of Ca2+ from microsomal vesicles, which can be blocked by EGTA, heparin or monensin, and can be restored by caffeine, A23187, thapsigargin, or 2,5-di-tert-butyl-1,4-benzohydroquinone. Verapamil, nifedipine and nifedipine inhibited Mn2+, Ba2+, or Ca2+-induced Ca2+ release from both vesicular and intact cells. However, the efficacies of these dihydropyridines were
