The image panel is divided into four parts: the left half of the panel (Figure 1-2, top left), displays a preview image that you can enlarge or reduce to preview the details of the image, and a tonal range that can be edited. The top half of the panel displays the image's histogram, which tracks the degree of contrast across the image (Figure 1-2, top right). To display the image on the right side of the panel, choose View > Image. Q: DirectCall in SystemVerilog - Do I need it or not? Does DirectCall provide any benefit in SystemVerilog? If it does provide any benefits, then when do we use it? A: The primary use of DirectCall is for interfacing with a C++ library or calling a C/C++ function. This can be done, for example, when developing an RTL module that will be embedded into another program's IP. If you are embedding the RTL module in an IP, you should use DirectCall because it allows the RTL module to be compiled into a standalone program, thus allowing you to run tests on the embedded version of the program without having to take it to the fpga (or equivalent) to test it. Another use for DirectCall is to call a function in a library that is not in SystemVerilog. For example, you could write an algorithm in Perl or Java or Python and call it from a SystemVerilog module. If you don't use DirectCall in this case, it will be necessary to convert to SystemVerilog format (e.g. call scalar functions instead of actual C/C++ functions) since SV does not support calling external C/C++ functions. An example of each of these cases is the verifyIPIC module. This module was converted from C/C++ to SystemVerilog. This module can be run without problems in SystemVerilog. Because it was converted from C/C++ to SystemVerilog, there is no need for DirectCall. 1 - y . Microsatellite instability, antigen expression, and cell cycle progression in colorectal cancer: alterations with advancing age. Aberrant regulation of cell cycle-associated proteins during tumorigenesis may be associated with earlier growth of colorectal tumors. In this study, alteration in expression of APC, p21, and cyclins E and D was assessed by immunohistochemical staining in 88 colorectal tumors. The following changes were evaluated: 1) intact antigen expression; 2) loss of antigen expression; 3) inappropriate antigen expression; and 4) altered antigen expression. Aberrant antigen expression was defined as loss or inappropriate expression of antigen in colorectal tumors. Alterations in antigen expression were evaluated with respect to age and tumor stage. Alterations in cell cycle protein expression occurred in 68% of colorectal tumors. The frequency of alterations increased with age, with those alterations occurring most frequently in tumors of older age. The greatest change in antigen expression was altered expression of APC and p21. For p21, the frequency of alteration increased with age but inversely correlated with age for APC ($r = 0.48$; $p < 0.05$). Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to chemical mechanical planarization of microelectronic fabrications. More particularly, the invention pertains to methods and apparatuses for optimizing the chemical mechanical planarization of microelectronic fabrications. 2.
